Risks of Using Electronic Communication

While the service provider will use reasonable means to protect the security and confidentiality of information sent and received using electronic communications, because of the risks outlined below, the service provider cannot guarantee the security and confidentiality of electronic communications.

- The use of electronic communications to discuss sensitive information can increase the risk of such information being disclosed to third parties.
- Despite reasonable efforts to protect the privacy and security of electronic communication, it is not possible to completely secure the information.
- Employers and online services may have a legal right to inspect and keep electronic communications that pass through their system.
- Electronic communications can introduce malware into a computer system and potentially damage or disrupt the computer, networks and security settings.
- Electronic communications are subject to disruptions beyond the control of the service provider that may prevent them from being able to provide services.
- Electronic communications can be forwarded, intercepted, circulated, stored, or even changed without the knowledge or permission of the service provider or the parent/guardian/student.
- Even after the sender and recipient have deleted copies of electronic communications, back-up copies may exist on a computer system.
- Electronic communications may be disclosed in accordance with a duty to report or a court order.
- Videoconferencing with a no-cost, publicly available service may be more open to interception than other forms of videoconferencing.
- There may be limitations in the services that can be provided through electronic communications, dependent on the means of electronic communications being utilized.
- Emails, text messages and instant messages can more easily be misdirected, resulting in increased risk of being received by unintended and unknown recipients.
- Emails, text messages and instant messages can be easier to falsify than handwritten or signed hard copies. It is not feasible to verify the true identity of the sender or to ensure that only the recipient can read the message once it has been sent.

Conditions of Using Electronic Communications

While the service provider will endeavour to review electronic communications in a timely manner, they cannot provide a timeline as to when communications will be reviewed and responded to. Electronic communications will not and should not be used for medical emergencies or other time-sensitive matters.

- Electronic communication may not be an appropriate substitute for some services that the service provider offers.
- Electronic communications may be copied or recorded in full or in part and made part of your clinical chart. Other individuals authorized to access your clinical chart, such as staff, may have access to those communications.
- The service provider may forward electronic communications to staff and those involved in the delivery and administration of your care. The service provider will not forward electronic communications to third parties, including family members, without your prior written consent, except as authorized or required by law.
- Prior to the commencement of the provision of services by the service provider through electronic communications, the service provider and the parent/guardian/student will establish an emergency protocol to address:
 - Steps to be followed in the event of a technical issue that causes a disruption in the services that are being provided by the service provider.
 - Steps to be followed in the event of a medical emergency that occurs during the provision of services.
- The service provider is not responsible for information lost due to technical failures associated with your software or internet service provider.
- The parent/guardian will inform the service provider of any changes in the parent/guardian/student's email address, mobile phone number or other account information necessary to communicate electronically.
- The parent/guardian will ensure the service provider is aware when they receive an electronic communication from the service provider, such as by a reply message or allowing "read receipts" to be sent.
- The parent/guardian will take precautions to preserve the confidentiality of electronic communications, such as using screen savers and safeguarding computer passwords.
- If the parent/guardian no longer consents to the use of electronic communications by the service provider, then the parent/guardian will provide notice of the withdrawal of consent by email or other written communication.
